

Marc Goldberg

Chief Technology Officer

Society for Human Resource Management

As Chief Technology Officer, Marc is responsible for all technology supporting SHRM's commitment to its members and fulfillment of its mission worldwide.

Marc is a technology executive and business partner with more than 20 years of experience in technology organizations.

Prior to joining SHRM, Marc has led technology organizations at Namely, Inc., comiXology (acquired by Amazon), Epix, Next New Networks (acquired by YouTube/Google), TV Guide, and most recently at Beyond Finance, Inc. Earlier in his career, Marc spent more than 10 years at America Online, straddling its acquisition of Time Warner.

Additionally, he has run a successful consulting practice providing advice and mentoring to CEOs and CTOs at startups and established businesses performing organizational development; developing hiring plans; formulating board communication processes; and coaching for both leadership and management. Marc has facilitated organization and process changes to improve quality management, managed agile methodology transitions, provided agile coaching, executed technology organizational designs, and improved technical recruitment processes.

Marc also serves on the Board of Advisors for FUNDopolis, a startup aiming to empower individuals and communities to invest in and support the small businesses they love. Community business owners will use FUNDopolis to help fund their growth and manage the full funding lifecycle, all while cultivating deeper relationships with their customers.

Marc holds a Bachelor of Science in Information Technology from American Intercontinental and studied at The George Washington University.
